

Laneway Housing and the Homeowner Protection Act

The "laneway housing" recently approved by the City of Vancouver is similar in nature to "coach houses" and the increasingly popular "detached legal suites" in other areas of the province, and are all considered new homes under the Homeowner Protection Act (the Act):

- Section 1 of the Act defines "new home" as:

"new home" means a building, or portion of a building, that is newly constructed or being constructed and is intended for residential occupancy, and includes

(a) a self-contained dwelling unit that is

(i) detached, or

(ii) attached to one or more other self-contained dwelling units,

(b) a building having 2 or more self-contained dwelling units under one ownership,

(c) common property, common facilities and other assets of a strata corporation,

(d) any building or portion of a building of a class prescribed by the regulations as a new home to which this Act applies, and

(e) a home that is or is being substantially reconstructed, but does not include a manufactured home unless otherwise prescribed;

- Section 22(1) of the Act says: "A person must not build a new home unless the new home is registered for coverage by home warranty insurance provided by a warranty provider."
- Section 20 of the Act permits an exemption from home warranty insurance and licensing if an Owner Builder Authorization is issued by the HPO for a proposed home
- Section 2 of the Homeowner Protection Act Regulation (BC Reg 29/99) allows for certain outright exemptions from the home warranty insurance (and licensing) requirements in the Act

Laneway housing fits within the definition of "new home" in the Act. Therefore, any builder planning to build such units would have to be licensed by the HPO and provide home warranty insurance for the units. Laneway housing is not described in the exemptions listed in the regulation. A laneway house might be eligible for an Owner Builder Authorization, but would likely not be approved if it was built by a third-party builder instead of the owner, and not if it was rented out instead of used personally in the first year.
